

POLITICIANS TURN
TO MAINE FOR SIGN
OF CAMPAIGN-DRIFT

National Issues Brought to the Fore in Old North State.

BIG GUNS GO ON THE STUMP

Democrats Will be Content With Small Plurality as Indicating Endorsement
of Wilson Policies Both Sides
Claim Majority of Progressives.

By Associated Press.
PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 11.—Voters
of Maine to the number of 140,000 or more went to the polls today to elect
a governor, two United States Senators, four representatives in Congress,
a state attorney general and a state
auditor.

National issues have been brought to the fore and party leaders brought
hundreds of speakers into the state, including former Justice Hughes, former Vice President Fairbanks and members of President Wilson's Cabinet to persuade the voters to line up with or against the national executive
and the majority in Congress.

Maine, however, is normally Republican, and the Democratic leaders insisted that something more than a scant Republican victory would be required to constitute repudiation of the administration, while a Democratic plurality, however small, would be accepted by them as an endorsement.

Fair weather prevails and this was expected to cause a big vote, equally desired by both sides.

The state officers are now Democratic and the party has now one United States senator and one of the four congressmen.

In 1914 the Progressives cast 18-235 votes for governor. How their vote will split today was a matter of dispute.

Both sides claim they will receive sufficient Progressive support to carry the election.

The polls opened at 6 o'clock and until close not later than 5 P. M.
Many returns will be slow, as some 20 towns and plantations are without telegraphic or telephonic communications with the outside. However, the result should be indicated before midnight.

BIG SPAN COLLAPSES

Quebec Bridge, Largest in World, Is Wrecked for Second Time.

By Associated Press.

QUEBEC, Sept. 11.—The new central span of the Quebec bridge, the largest cantilever suspension bridge
in the world, collapsed and fell into the St. Lawrence river while being hoisted into place today with a probable loss of life. Workmen on shore saw numbers of workmen struggling in the water.

The bridge was being constructed
at a cost of $17,000,000 in order to shorten the railway journey from Halifax to the Canadian Northwest by 200 miles.

The bridge stands on the site of the structure which collapsed on August 29, 1907, with a loss of 70 lives.

The central span which fell today weighs more than 5,000 tons and is 610 feet long.

The collapse occurred when the
span was about 15 feet in the air.
Early indications are that the loss of life would be heavy, for there were 50 men on the structure when it fell.
Some of these have been rescued. The company places the life loss at 25.

WANT SOLDIERS HOME

War Department Bombarded With Demands for Troops Recall.

Special to The Courier.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Pressure
from political and business quarters
is being brought to bear upon Secretary of War Baker and administration officials generally to withdraw National Guard organizations from the border.

Members of Congress, business houses and friends and relatives of soldiers have deluged the department with the last few days with requests for the release of the militia. The department has informed all inquirers that action will be taken as soon as practicable.

Secretary Baker already has indicated that as soon as the units now en route to the border arrive other organizations will be withdrawn.

TOLD TO WEIGH BREAD

Housewives Are Asked to Help Federal Officers in Bakers' Fight.

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—Housewives
of Chicago were today urged to weigh bread they buy and to assist the city
department of weights and measures
in watching local bakers for violations of the anti-trust laws and the ordinances against short weight.

The recommendation came from William F. Cluett, in charge of this part of the department's work, who announced that he would have a corps
of inspectors sent over Chicago
today to test the weight of loaves.

Will be Operated On.
Mrs. John Delaney of Dunbar, was admitted to the South Side Private Hospital last night for an operation.

ALL UNIONS MAY DECLARE STRIKE

New York Labor Organizations Are Credited to Quit in Sympathy
With Street Car Men.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—All members of unions in New York, Yonkers,
Mount Vernon and New Rochelle found themselves today active factors in the dispute between the Interborough
Rapid Transit Company and its employees. The various individual labor organizations in these cities served by the Interborough and its subsidiary companies received the appeal drafted
by the central labor body last night
requesting a sympathetic strike of all organized wage earners in their jurisdiction "in support of the contention
of the street railway men for the right
to organize."

Since the response to this appeal
must be decided by vote of members,
several days must elapse before its effect will be known.

While the elevated and subway lines
continued running today without apparent interruption, the strike on the surface lines has spread rapidly. Union officials assert 11,600 men are on strike. Not a car wheel turned all day
Sunday in Yonkers, Mount Vernon
and New Rochelle, and every surface
car stopped running last night in Man-hatten and The Bronx also after these two boroughs had received an extremely limited service during the day.

SECOND WEEK OPENS

Criminal Court List Taken Up Before
Three Judges.

Special to The Courier.

UNIONTOWN, Sept. 11.—Criminal
court's second week opened today
with Judges J. Q. Van Swearingen, E. H. Reppert and J. C. Work on the bench. Judge Work was called in from the orphan's court to assist in clearing the court calendar of cases which have been listed by District Attorney S. John Morrow for the first three days of this week. There are 11 cases to be tried in the three days.
If the work is completed by Thursday
forenoon, the judges and court officials expect to spend Thursday after-

John Viziolsky was placed on trial
today on manslaughter charges. Presented against him by County Detective John J. Smith, Viziolsky is accused of causing the death of Charles E. McWright, two and one-half years old, on the fourth of July in Luzerne township. He is said to have run over the child with his automobile.

In a trial lasting only a few minutes
Angustino Bresolin was found guilty
in criminal court No. 1 before Judge
Van Swearingen of larceny of a bicycle. He is said to have taken the vehicle from Ray Rhoades near High House.

James Cooley of Fairchance was tried before Judge Reppert on charges
of assault and battery with intent to rob and robbery. He is alleged to have held up Charles Stanley, a foreigner, with two other men at Fair-chance on August 21, and taken $35
from him. Stanley testified that Cooley attacked him and took the money. He said that he did not know the two other men.

John Arson Reardon of Vanderbilt
began action in common pleas court
for a divorce from Howard Kessler Reardon, who was last heard of in Denver, Colo. They were married
February 27, 1914, at Cumberland. Desertion January 29, 1915, is alleged.

Mrs. Hattie Divens of Elm Grove began a divorce suit against Dupe Divens of Dawson. They were married July 24, 1907, at Connellsville. Desertion March 5, 1916, is alleged.

USE LIQUID FIRE

Despite Fierce Attack the Germans
Are Driven Back.

By Associated Press.

PARIS, Sept. 11.—Five times last night the Germans attacked positions
newly won by the French on the Somme front. The war office announces they were repulsed each time with heavy loss.

The official report says the Germans
employed burning liquids in making their attack. Two fighting occurred south of the Somme, from Bery to the region south of Chaulnes.

PARIS, Sept. 11.—British troops on the front in Greek Macedonia took the offensive last night. They crossed the Struma river, the war office announced
today, and attacked the Bulgarians,
who are retreating desperately.

CANCELS ENGAGEMENTS

Dying Sister.

By Associated Press.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Sept. 11.—
Canceling all engagements, President Wilson left here early today to go to the bedside of his sister, Mrs. A.
E. Howe, who is critically ill at her home in New London, Conn. The President motored to New York and will finish the trip by train.

The departure of the President did not delay the opening today of the summer executive offices at Ashbury
Park by a staff of White House clerks.

has been sunk by a submarine, according to the Algemeen Handels-blad. The crew of the submarine jects before blowing her up. The crew of the Lindborg has been landed.

GIFFORD PINCHOT
DECLARES HE WILL VOTE FOR HUGHES

Great Conservationist Tells
Why He Has Lost Faith
in Wilson.

DOES NOT DO WHAT HE SAYS

Record Shows Him Staunchly Dominated
by Political Expediency; Hughes a Man of His Word, Who Will not Dodge Moral Issue; Career is Open.

Gifford Pinchot, the famous conservationalist and candidate for United States senator on the Progressive ticket two years ago, will vote for Hughes. In an open letter to The Courier, Mr. Pinchot succinctly
tells how his admiration for President Wilson has been dissipated. "I came to see that President Wilson had a greater power than any other man in public life to say one thing, do another and get away with it," the former forester sums up. Pinchot denounces Wilson for betraying the conservationists of the country, and turning the patronage of the government over to the spoilsman. He says:

"It is the duty of every American citizen to make and support openly his choice among the candidates for the Presidency. That duty is especially solemn this year because great events
and great decisions are certain to confront us during the next administration."

"I am neither a Democrat nor a Republican, but a Progressive. Yet there being no Progressive nominee, unless I choose to support a candidate who cannot be elected, I must vote for either Wilson or Hughes."

"For many months after his inauguration, I thought well of President Wilson. In many respects I liked what he said about what he was going to do. He talked well and made a good impression. It was only when I began to check up what he said by what he did that I was forced to change
my view."

"In the end I came to see that President Wilson had a greater power than any other man in public life to say
one thing but to do another, and get away with it."

"I do not say that Wilson would have thrust us into war. There was no need of war. But there was need of courage to give us peace with self-respect. If Wilson had shown courage this country would not have skid-ded from one crisis to the next, again
and again narrowly escaping disaster."
"We have all heard him declare against intervention in Mexico, while actually intervening to dictate who should and who should not hold office
there; and denounce war against Mexico while actually engaged in war."

"For more than a year after the world war began Wilson did not let
a finger to put us in a position of defense. Only the proverbial good luck of America has kept us from paying the bitter price for his unforgettable neglect."

"We have all heard him ridicule the idea of a greater navy, then declare
for incomparably the greatest navy
in the world, and then go back on that."

"We have all heard him declare for exporting our coastwise trade from lois in the Panama Canal; and have seen him show our own people and the English that he did not mean it."

"We have seen him elected on a platform which pledged him to single term as President and then become a candidate for another term."

"We have all heard him declare for
the conservation of our natural resources; and have seen him neglect
that policy, and refuse his help to defeat the Saluda waterpower bill, the most dangerous attack on conservation
since Ballinger's effort to turn Alaska over to the Guggenheims."

"We have all heard him declare for efficiency in government, and have seen him set the pork-barrel first and throw efficiency away. I have known official Washington from the inside
for six administrations. In that time the government business has never been so badly done and so extravagantly as it is now done under Wilson."

"We have all heard him announce
himself as the champion of Civil Service reform; and have seen him turn
the government departments over to the spoilsman as no other President has done in 20 years."

"We have all heard him declare for
plutocracy publicly; and have seen him
conduct the most secret administration of our time."

"We have all heard him announce
himself as President of all the people,
and have seen him, as the most participant President of his generation, flout
and oppose the Progressives, whom now, because he needs them, he seeks to conciliate and enlist."

"It is bad enough that Wilson's foreign policy has left us, as the war
draws toward its end without a friend
among the great nations of the world
and without the respect of any one of them. What is worse is that he has kept us from standing up for what we know to be right."

"The ignoble standard of profit over principle which Mr. Wilson forced upon the country in our foreign relations
has been applied to himself as president.
In what he has said, done and left undone the record shows him steadily
dominated by political expediency."

"These facts and many others like them have forced me to see that what he has done is wrong."

AGED RESIDENT OF
WEST SIDE STRUCK
BY AN AUTO; DIES

Luke Gillen Steps in Front
of a Machine on Yough Bridge.

SUCCUMBS ON WAY TO HOSPITAL

John Gillen, Driver of Machine, Released After Corner Views Body;
Inquest Will be Held Tomorrow
Evening; Victim Was an Assessor.

Luke Gillen, 61 years old, one of the best known residents of the West Side,
was fatally injured about 11 o'clock
Saturday night on the Yough bridge,
when he was run down by a touring car driven by John Gillen of Eighth street, Greenwood. Mr. Gillen had started to cross to the south side of the bridge and stepped directly in front of the approaching automobile.
He was thrown aside, his head striking a steel girder of the bridge. Gillen brought the car to a stop, picked up
the injured man and was taking him
to the Cottage State Hospital when death occurred. Mr. Gillen was injured internally, his left leg was broken
and there were cuts about the face.
Gillen was placed under arrest by Policeman P. M. Rull soon after the accident and was released after Coroner S. H. Baum viewed the body. An inquest into the accident will be held tomorrow evening at Funeral Director
J. L. Stader's office. The jury is composed of Harry J. Stafford, H. K. Berlin, J. B. Kuriz, Henry Goldsmith, William Dull and S. M. Goodman.

Gillen is a driver for Smith Gramm
and is said to be careful. Witnesses
of the accident said he was not driving rapidly.

Mr. Gillen was born in Ireland and came to this country about 36 years ago. He was assessor in the Seventh ward, and was widely known throughout the county. He was employed by the H. C. Erick Coke Company
at Trotter for a number of years and for some time was a car inspector
for the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company. For the past six months
he had been employed as night watchman at the shops of the Connellsville Machine and Car Company. He had completed his job when he started to work Saturday. His family included his wife, Mary, and three children, who were at home, but he refused to do so, saying that if he did not feel better he would return home. He was coming back when he met his death.

Mr. Gillen, prior to coming to Connellsville, resided at Dubois for 16 years. He married Miss Catherine Flynn, who with the following children survive: Mrs. J. J. Harper, Misses Mary and Kathryn, the latter
two at home, Luke, James and John Gillen. He was a brother-in-law of J.
B. Moloney of Indianapolis, a former well known resident of Connellsville.

The body was removed to the family
residence in Eighth street yesterday afternoon by Funeral Director J. L.
Stader. Burial from the house tomorrow morning at 8:30 o'clock. Requiem high mass will be celebrated at 9 o'clock from the Immaculate Conception Church of which Mr. Gillen was a member. Interment in St.
Joseph's cemetery.

Ulls, where he received treatment. The

the police say is dangerous.

PRIZES AWARDED
LOCAL MERCHANTS

L. Dunn Store, Stetclair and Aaron
Lend in Absence of Fire Hazards.

Prizes of $5 each for the best kept stores, from a fire prevention standpoint have been awarded to the L.
Dunn Store, Daniel Stetclair and The Aaron Company. The special inspection was finished Saturday under the direction of Fire Chief W. E. DeBolt.
Special mention for good condition
was made of the Wright-Metzler Company, Max Levine, J. W. McClaron, Mikalaris & Betbals, Crowley-Mes-
troian Company, Hooper & Long, Ko-
backer, Artman & Work, Brownell
Shoe Company, McGroarty & Company,
F. W. Woolworth Company, The Economy Grocery and W. R. Scott.

"The condition of the mercantile district from a fire hazard standpoint
has been good generally," reads the report of the inspectors. "But special efforts were made upon this occasion
to put business places in still better condition."

"The result of this special contest
demonstrates that there is little reason for a business place to be kept in an unsafe or unclean condition."

Chief DeBolt says that if storekeepers are able to improve conditions to such a high degree for a special occasion, he believes that little or no trouble will be occasioned in keeping
them in that condition at all times.

Fire records show that most of our mercantile fires originated from rubbish accumulations, and this particular evil has been reduced to a minimum under the present chief's administration.

The fire department has been making monthly inspections of all buildings in the business district for several years but lately a special card index system has been installed where-
by the condition of all establishments
is carefully recorded each month.

GIFFORD PINCHOT DECLARES HE WILL VOTE FOR HUGHES

Mr. Wilson says is no sign of what he has done or of what he will do. The one thing his record shows is that what he stands for now he is not likely to stand for long. I do not care what his platform or his campaign declarations may be, because the common experience of us all has taught us that in him they are simply "mollusks to catch flies."

Hughes, on the other hand, is a man of his word. His record as governor of New York proves that. It shows him to be honest, fearless and free from the domination of special interests and corrupt politicians. So far as the conservation policies are concerned, both what he said and what he did could hardly have been better. I am confident that under him those policies will be safe. He is a strong man who will dodge no moral issues and he will give us an honest and efficient administration.

As a Progressive I believe in nationalism. So does Hughes. I am certain that under Hughes the progressive policies will fare better than under Wilson and that the safety, honor, and welfare of the country will be immeasurably better hands.

"I cannot vote for Wilson, because I cannot trust him. He does not do what he says. Hughes does. There is no choice as Hughes, and I shall work and vote for him."

DEMOCRAT FOR HUGHES.
PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 11.—Walter George Smith, a prominent Philadelphia attorney and a member of the executive committee of the American Bar Association, who has been a Democrat all his life, today declared for Hughes.

When asked in what particular way the administration had displeased him his reply was: "In every way."

WOMAN SO WEAK COULD NOT SLEEP

Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

North Oxford, Mass.—"I had lost three children and I was all run down and so weak I could not sleep at night. My eyesight would leave me and everything I ate upset my stomach. I was very nervous and if I would start to sleep I would lie down before I could finish. I was looking over the paper one day and read of a woman who felt as I did and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I took it too. Now I am proud to tell you I am feeling fine and have given birth to a boy baby. He is my 'Pinkham' baby. I keep a bottle of Compound in my house always."—Mrs. PETER MARCO, Box 54, North Oxford, Mass.

Sleeplessness, indigestion, weakness, and nervousness are symptoms which indicate a lowered vitality of the female organism, and the tonic, strengthening properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs, contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, are just what is needed by every woman who is in Mrs. Marco's condition.

To Avoid Dandruff

You do not want a slow treatment
when hair is falling and the dandruff
germ is killing the hair roots. Dandruff means no hair.

Get, at any drug store, a bottle of Selsun for 25c or $1.00 for extra large size. Use as directed, for it does the work quickly. It kills the dandruff germ, removes the hair roots and immediately
stops itching scalp. It is safe and sure,
is not greasy, is easy to use and will not rinse. Selsun and Selsun are invariably used by the best of them. The best thing to use is Selsun, for it is pure and also inexpensive.

FOR COLLEGE CLASS ROOM.

Banishing summer's frocks and forbelows from her frocks, its frivolities
from her mind, she returns in smart simplicity and blue serge to college class rooms. The hip-yoke effect of her skirt, and the back and front panels, are cut in one piece, with a seam in the panel at the back, heavy navy taffeta, lined in serge, fills out the skirt at the sides, and makes up the tailored sleeves, set in beneath a quaint little sleeve-cap at the shoulder. Detachable cuffs, collar and pleated ventee are of white handkerchief linen.

MERCHANT COKE OPERATORS ARE APPREHENSIVE

That the Decision in the Valley Ore Rate Case
Foreshadows

ADVERSE ACTION ON COAL RATES

Ore Districts Rearranged Resulting in Advances to Some Furnaces and Reductions to Others; Monessen Is Put in the Same District as Johnstown.

Some merchant coke operators are apprehensive that the decision handed down by the Interstate Commerce Commission on Tuesday, in what is known as the Valley Ore Rate Case,
may foreshadow an unfavorable determination of some of the matters involved in the appeal of the Conneautville Coal Tariff Association for an equitable adjustment of coal freight rates.

The ore rate decision covers the question of rearranging freight
districts which is the main contention
of the coal shippers in the Conneautville region, hence the interest which attaches to the decision in former case.

The case which has just been decided had its origin in a formal complaint
filed by the Pittsburgh Steel Company, whose plant is at Monessen, against the Pittsburgh district ore carrying rate, then applicable to Monessen. By the decision Monessen is placed in a group with Johnstown, and its rate on direct ore has been increased, instead of decreased, from 88 cents a ton to 91 cents. Johnstown is thrown into a new group with Monessen, and its rate
has been lowered from $1.02 a ton to 91 cents.

These rates apply from a port group
extending from Ashtabula Harbor on the east to Cleveland on the west. For shipments to some blast furnace destinations, that group of ports is extended to Erie, Pa. on the east and Lorain, O., on the west. Shipments from Sandusky and Toledo are not affected in the grouping for western Pennsylvania, southeastern Ohio and adjoining West Virginia points.

In addition to the rearrangement of ports lake port and destinations groups
which the decision orders, the ore carriers are required to make a separate charge for forwarding ore from ships to carts, and a rate of 6 cents per ton is prescribed for that service. Under the revisions made in district bounda-

John Ashton, a young mechanical engineer is completing the plans of a new submarine. The government is interested in his work, and he has promised to have it done by the tenth of the month, which gives him only six days in which to complete it. More and more he has been resorting to whiskey to keep his brain active. His friend Franklin Darrow and his assistant, Robert Gray remonstrate with him, but to no avail. His fiancee, Grace Scentley, telephones him and urges him to attend a dinner party on the ninth. He accepts, though against his will. He falls asleep and dreams that he prepares to attend the dinner; he is still intoxicated when he awakes. Grace's father at once breaks off the engagement, and he leaves the house in disgrace. He goes home and finishes his plans on the morning of the tenth, and then still wearing his evening clothes, wanders out into unknown streets. He goes into a saloon and drinks until he is insensible. There he is noticed by the captain and mate of a freighter and shanghaied on board the vessel. When he comes to his senses he is out at sea. Later he puts from him, "The devil at his elbow," whiskey, and he and his fiancee have an early marriage. Tuesday, "The Clown," a five part Paramount attraction and "Gloria's Romance," will be the attraction. Wednesday's feature will be "The Marriage of Mollie O'Neil," presenting Mae Marsh.

Soda Water

Little Talks on Health and Hygiene by Samuel G. Dixon, M. D., LL. D., Commissioner of Health.

The soda fountain has become a national institution. The fact that it is universally used is not, however, to be taken as a recommendation. Naturally during the warm months there is an unusual hankering for cool liquids. What the system really craves is hot weather is water. Cool water, not ice cold. This is a natural demand and one that should be supplied.

We have acquired a taste for sweetened concoctions which masquerade under the names of all the fruits that were found in the Garden of Eden and others never heard of except on soda fountain advertisements. The bulk of these are chemical products in which no actual fruit is used. They are seldom nourishing.

In very hot weather a glass or so of these sweetened liquids will often interfere materially with the digestion and their tendency is to lessen the normal appetite for nourishing food.

There is another factor connected with the serving of drinks, soft and otherwise, which is open to the sever-

How'd you like it on a sunny day when you were dyin' to play baseball?" says the elevator boy.

"Well, I have. I thought about it most of the time for four years. Even the fellows in Sing Sing get to sometimes, but we don't. When I get to feelin' I can't stand it, I think of block after block of office buildings in this town, every one of 'em with fifteen or twenty cages, and a fellow like me in every one of 'em, spendin' his life goin' up, comin' down, goin' up, comin' down—and outside the world goin' on!"—American Magazine.

"KIDDING THE FRESHIES" OF OUR TROOPS

Many "Third Lieutenants" Are Appointed by Experienced Men—Now Ones Seek Ten Yards of Skirmish Line and Key to Parade Grounds.

DESPITE punishment of the "morning after," there is more real fun in camp than in any other phase of military life on account of the serious background and tension around.

Private Edward J. Radcliffe, Company I, First Pennsylvania Infantry, writes about some of the things that are causing a laugh among the soldier boys in El Paso. He tells of the manner in which recruits are "kidded" and about the institution of electing a third lieutenant.

"After the first thrilling call to arms by the commander in chief of the line has echoed into action and awakened the spirit of the past," he writes, "after the blast of the trumpet and the heavy tread of the troops off to the concentration camps has ceased, when the sons of anxious mothers, wives and sweethearts have settled deep in their breasts and when the first nervous tension incident to pre-front days has been relieved, then the fun of camp life begins.

"In fact, even before the soldierly, I believe, are issued with that spirit of assigned fatality concerning the future which is essential to the making of a good soldier, the sport with the recruits and rookies has begun. All the traditional pranks of camp life are carried out once more. The 'freshies' are sent to the commissary department for the key to the parade ground, ten yards of the skirmish line, the issue of lavender gloves for dress parade, etc.

Election of Third Lieutenant.

"No more have the troops plucked their canyons and partially settled on the bosom of Mother Earth than the time honored election of 'third lieutenants' take place. This is the pot pourri of camp life. The ball is usually started rolling as the men lie in their tents after taps. A couple of the older men engage in a conversation concerning the choice of a third lieutenant. A guileless recruit becomes intensely interested when the old hands in a casual way make it clear that it is one of the cherished traditions of the service that the third lieutenant shall be chosen from among the new recruits in order that the new men may have some one to look out for their interests up to the officers' street.

"The next day the ambitious recruit is putting out feelers to see how his chances are for the coveted honor. He is highly flattered to find that his 'feelers' are greeted and nursed along by the 'vets.' After the various candidates have retained 'campaign managers' through the payment of 'tribute' at the various 'cantines' about the camp and have run their legs off getting signatures of those who pledged themselves to vote for them, an election is held in the company street. Usually the most guileless of the bunch of candidates is chosen and he is henceforth subject to all sorts of orders as long as he falls for the 'bunk.' The morning after election he finds himself ordered to clean before reveille and dress himself out in heavy marching order in order that he may go to brigade headquarters to get his sword and horse and various other equipment that a third lieutenant is supposed to have.

Can't See Brigadier.

"The fact that lieutenants are not provided with mounts seldom makes up for the fact that he is being kidded. After he is all ready to march away he is informed that the brigadier general is busy with his war map and cannot receive the new officer that morning. If the 'lieutenant' falls for this he is up the following morning and the morning after that only to be disappointed by the occupation of the brigadier general in other matters than conferring commissions on 'third lieutenants.'

"When this line of horology becomes tiresome, the new third lieutenant is solemnly presented with fake 'dispatches' by a joke loving company clerk, which informs the candidate that he has been transferred to Battery Q of the right field artillery, some miles from the camp. Attired in the heavy marching order that he had become accustomed to since his 'promotion,' the candidate is sent across the fields to some lunacy or it may be actual neighboring encampment. There he may learn wisdom, or he may not, and come home to learn through the medium of a 'bunk' busting sergeant who informs him that he is scheduled for a sojourn to the quartermaster and some extra heavy duty for being absent from camp without leave.

"The greatest fun, however, lies in running the guard after taps. Some of the dialogue of camp life later lends its way into vaudeville camp sketches and may be familiar to some.

"Sentry—Halt! Who goes there?
Wayfarer—Nobody.
Sentry—Come along.
Another sample is as follows:
Sentry—Halt! Who goes there?
Night Wayfarer—A friend with a bottle.

"Sentry—Advance, friend, with the cork out.
Another follows:
Sentry—Who goes there?
Wayfarer—You're not blind; come and see.

"Many other exchanges between sentries and wayfarers in typical camp vaudeville which is overheard by those lying in their tents within the camp in the stillness of the night often see the entire camp in a roar until the sentries of the quarters come down the company street with their lanterns, calling sternly: 'Steady! Steady!'

"Of course this 'vaudeville' at the expense of sentries brings sure punishment, because a sentry is supposed to receive absolute respect that is accorded a commissioned officer. Punishment usually consists in extra duty, such as digging trenches, chopping wood, etc.

JOLLY PASTIME NOW ON THE BORDER

Little Sublimity of Interest About the Various Regiments Now Fighting Texas Sun and Rains—Some Camp Repartee Officers Do Not Hear.

Cannot Decline His Pay.

The comptroller of the treasury has decided "that the conditions involved in enlistment in the national guard do not permit an election to refuse pay for service under enlistment so, as to receive the pay of a civil position under the government" during the leave of absence period granted an enlisted man.

The decision was brought out in a case submitted by the attorney general. It was that of a special agent of the department enlisted in the national guard of Pennsylvania. This agent refused his pay as an enlisted man for the leave of absence period that he might draw his regular salary of $9 per day.

The comptroller goes on to repeat a former important ruling of his office that employees of the government who are members of the national guard may, after actual muster into service, receive pay as a civilian employee until expiration of leave of absence if the combined pay does not exceed $2,000 per annum. Above that figure pay as civilian employee would be prohibited under the act of May 10, 1916, the army appropriation bill.

Michigan Men Drill.

Following another four examination of both the Thirty-first and Thirty-second regiments, under direction of Major William B. Jones, Michigan troops have entered upon the first stage of the three months' drill which has been laid out for them by the war department.

Every man in the Michigan contingent must submit to the re-examination of his feet for corns, bunions, ingrowing toe nails, hammer toes, overgrown toes, broken arches and flat shoes. This is to determine if the new shoes which were recently issued are of the nature which is conducive to foot health. Major Jones is an expert and examines feet at the rate of one pair every fifteen seconds.

Colonel Corville, acting brigade commander, has appointed Major Stewart of the Thirty-second and Major Dumas of the Thirty-first to interpret the order for troop work for the next three months. They will outline a plan of action which will be followed by captains, brigade and division commanders.

For the month of August the work will be confined to company drills. Each company must devote three and a half hours a day to this work. Besides the drills, lectures on military discipline and courtesy will be delivered.

The new order requires that every man must change in the work with the exception of the sick, guards, cooks and one noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters. This would relieve the cook of all assistants, such as kitchen police and mess sergeants, and would work a hardship on the entire company. To alleviate this condition Colonel Barlow has addressed a letter to General Bell asking that sufficient help be sent for the mess be allowed to remain in camp.

Variety In Indiana Food.

The home folk may think that there is no variety in the commissary supplies issued to the Indiana officers. Here is the list that was issued to the thirteen organizations of the Third regiment recently, on orders of Colonel Kuhlman: Bread, fresh beef, rice, flour, beans, potatoes, corn, tea, vinegar, bacon, asparagus, milk, sheep, prunes, pickles, rice, sugar, table salt, soda, crackers, washing powder, onions, coffee, hard, oatmeal, salmon, tomato soup, canned peaches, baking powder, canned peas, chutney, pepper, canned cherries, peas, grain, crackers, evaporated apples, macaroni, hard bread, glucose, assorted jam, prepared mustard, lemon extract, vanilla, peaches, blackberry jam, soap, matches, candles.

Lieutenant Frank Buschmager, quartermaster of the First battalion, Indiana field artillery, has issued the following to the 557 men in the unit, in addition to what they received at Fort Harrison: One thousand four hundred and forty-five undershirts, 1,107 drawers, 880 pairs of stockings, 603 sweaters, 183 pairs of riding gloves, besides the riding breeches and fatigue uniforms. So, you see, the artillerymen are not in rags.

One of the interesting characters at Lino Grande camp is Paul Benson, private Company K, Third regiment, from Auburn, Ind. He is instructor in Spanish in the officers' school of the Third regiment and says they are getting along well with the language, which is taught largely to everyday phrases and sentences that are needed in dealing with the Mexicans. The officers have learned that certain English words like "march and guard" may be changed to Spanish by adding the sound of "n." The rule is not a general one. For instance, Major Hecley called for "soup" at the Mercedes hotel and the Mexican waiter brought him a bowl of soup. Had the major asked for "jabon" he would have got the soap. Benson for several years was connected with a mining company in Arizona, Mexico, where Villa last was reported. Benson says that the natives are courteous and will divide their last bite with a stranger who is hungry.

Troopers About In Aprons.

Twelve hundred of Colonel Milton J. Foreman's Chicago troopers tossed aside their rifles and sabers the other day and donned the housewife's apron. It was a week and homecoming. The camp was combed from stem to stern, if such an expression can apply to land operations. Every foot was set in the finest order, every stray piece of paper was gathered from the troop trucks and grounds, every hammock was leveled and rubbed, and even the muskets brush to a distance 1,000 feet from headquarters was given a trimming it never before had. Clouds of dust arose from all parts of the encampment. At the end of the day Colonel Foreman promised to have the cleanest camp in Brownsville.

"It is the first bit of real manual labor the boys have had since they came here," said the regimental leader. "Heretofore all work of this character, cleaning, digging, etc., has been done by Mexicans, hired by me. But if the boys go into Mexico they will have to do this work, so it won't hurt them to try their hand at it now. Tidiness and cleanliness prevent disease, and the health of my men is my first concern."

Visits His Son.

He raised his boy to be a soldier. Captain L. F. O'Donnell of Chicago, seventy-two years old, who served through the civil war in the Forty-sixth Ohio volunteers, has reached Leon Springs, Tex. He came all the way from the shore of Lake Michigan to visit his son Elmer, who is a husky young private in the machine gun company of the First Illinois infantry. The veteran walked down the perilous slope of "Hell's gateway," which leads to the camp, with a firm step and his head erect in defiance of the Texas sun. The boy did not expect to see his father, and it was a surprise party. When they came face to face in Texas, Private O'Donnell briskly saluted Captain O'Donnell, and the salute was gravely returned. Then they greeted each other as a fond father and a joyful son would be expected to do.

"Gee, father, it's good to see you here!" cried Elmer. "What did mother say when you left her?" "Is he making a good soldier?" Captain O'Donnell asked First Sergeant Jacob Zulu. On being assured that the boy was doing his full duty, the veteran drew his son aside, and they talked of home. Later in the day Captain O'Donnell was taken to see the Mexicans being fired at the rate of 500 shots a minute.

"One of those little things might have settled the battle of Gettysburg," said Captain O'Donnell. "I may say my boy the conditions under which he is serving in the country. The comforts and sanitary arrangements provided for American soldiers in the field were beyond the dreams of the boys in blue of '61. Mother will be glad to know how well her boy is being taken care of by Uncle Sam."

The gray veteran mused with the youths of the machine gun company and confessed to a growing desire to re-enlist.

"I'm strong enough and healthy enough, but mother would never stand for it," he explained.

To Talk by Phone to Chicago.

"Hello, Chicago!" will be shouted by every member of the First Illinois brigade in Camp Wilson, Tex., and their voices will be heard by wives, mothers and sweethearts in Chicago. This at least is the long distance telephone plan under consideration by electrical experts who are serving in the Illinois national guard. Captain George E. Boyd of Company K, Second infantry, is sponsor of the plan. He is an official of a large electric company, and forty-seven members of his command are employees of that firm. Captain Boyd is certain that he can arrange for wholesale telephone communication between these men and their families in Chicago. The idea of placing the entire brigade and possibly other Illinois units here in connection with Chicago by telephone is now under consideration.

"Chiggers" Club In Southwest. Chicago has its clubs of ultra extravagance, but "Camp Chiggers," where the First brigade is encamped at Leon Springs, has a club which takes the hard tack for exclusiveness. It was known as the Chigger club and its membership is confined to officers who have sustained at least thirty chigger bites during the present tour of duty. There are about twenty-five full fledged members and about fifty more are on the "waiting list."

Captain Thomas Nolan of the Seventh regiment has been chosen president. Lieutenant Robert S. Givens of the Second regiment is chairman of the entertainment committee. The duties of this committee are light, but active, as they are merely called upon to entertain the chiggers.

SIRIUS AND THE DOG DAYS.

Time Has Worn Away the Link That Bound Them Together.

The dog days, when excessive heat is supposed to prevail, begin July 3, according to the ancient reckoning, and continue to Aug. 11. All sorts of traditions and superstitions are connected with this period, and various dates are also given.

In some sections the dog days are said to begin on July 24 and to end on Aug. 24, while still others attribute the malolent influence of the dog star upon the earth to the period from Aug. 4 to Sept. 4, in accordance with the ancient Egyptian reckoning.

As a matter of fact, the rising of the dog star, Canis Majoris or Sirius, has nothing to do with the affair at all. The rising of that star has been so accelerated by the procession of the equinoxes during the passage of more than 2,000 years that the corresponding conditions for the ancient dog days no longer exist.

In ancient times in the latitudes of the Mediterranean the period of greatest heat nearly corresponded with that time in which the dog star rose at the same time with the sun. To this conjunction all antiquity and all the later followers of judicial astrology attributed a malignant influence.

Among the modern notions regarding the dog days is the absurd belief that if during this period that dogs are most likely to go mad.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

No Chance For It.

That sensation, said to be the finest in the world, of finding a two dollar bill in an old vest never happened to us and never will. When we are through with a vest there are no pockets or any lining.—Kansas City Star.

Napoleon Was too Busy!

T'WAS a sad day for the French Emperor when he sent out the "to busy" message to a certain man who called with an idea. He told his assistants to attend to it. They lacked Napoleon's vision and soon after they took down the Corsican's sign, "Emperor."

Napoleon's particular caller this busy day was Robert Fulton, who wanted to show him how he could take his troops to England by steam. Had Napoleon's eye been on the future and not glued to the present there would have been a different map of Europe, and no lonely cell at St. Helena.

During these extra war boom times a few Napoleons of business have used the "to busy" excuse when the vital question of advertising was presented to them.

They have been too busy for the immediate present to entrench prosperity and establish future good will.

To them just these words—"Remember Napoleon." Don't put off the vital question of your newspaper plans any longer. Don't wait until your competitors have covered the field.

The Daily Courier will be glad to give you information or you can get many valuable suggestions by writing to the Bureau of Advertising, American Newspaper Publishers Association, World Bldg. New York.

Examine Your TEETH Tonight

—after you clean them.

You will find, in all probability, an accumulation of tartar on the enamel and bits of food deposit hiding between the crevices. YOUR DENTIFRICE does not FULLY CLEAN! Loss of teeth is caused usually by one of two conditions—Pyorrhea decay, both of which develop, as a rule, only in the mouth where germ-laden tartar is present.

SENRECO, the recently discovered formula of a dental specialist, is two-fold in its action. First, it REALLY CLEANS, embodying specially prepared soluble granules unusually effective in cleaning away food deposits. Second, it is particularly destructive to the germ of Pyorrhea. Yet it is perfectly safe, containing neither injurious chemicals nor hard grit.

Avoid Pyorrhea and decay. Get Senreco from your dealer today. In large tubes, 25c. Send 4c to Senreco, 304 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, for liberal-sized trial package.

The LONE STAR RANGER

A ROMANCE OF THE BORDER

By ZANE GREY

"THE LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS"

"RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE", ETC.

They got off the car, and the girls followed as naturally as ordinary travelers. The station was a good deal larger than that at Bradford, and there was considerable action and bustle incident to the arrival of the train.

Duane's sweeping gaze searched faces, rested upon a man who seemed familiar. This fellow's look, too, was that of one who knew Duane, but was waiting for a sign, a cue. Then Duane recognized him—MacNelly, clean-shaven. Without misgiving he appeared different, younger.

When MacNelly saw that Duane intended to greet him, hurried forward to meet him. A keen light flashed from his eyes. He was glad, eager, yet suppressing himself, and the glances he sent back and forth from Duane to Longstreth were questioning, doubtful. Certainly Longstreth did not look the part of an outlaw.

"Duane! Lord, I'm glad to see you," was the Captain's greeting. "Then at closer look into Duane's face his warmth fled—something he saw there checked his enthusiasm, or at least its utterance.

"MacNelly, shake hands with Chesedine," said Duane, low-voiced. The ranger stood dumb, motionless. But he saw Longstreth's instant action, and as he saw the ranger's hand, he stepped back, his face white.

"Any of your men down here?" queried Duane, sharply. "No, they're up there."

"Come, MacNelly, you walk with him. We're ladies in the party. I'll come behind with them."

They set off up-town. Longstreth walked as if he were with friends on the way to dinner. The girls were mute. MacNelly walked like a man in a trance. There was not a word spoken in four blocks.

Presently Duane espied a stone building on a corner of the broad street. There was a big sign, "Rancher's Bank."

"There's the hotel," said MacNelly. "Some of my men are there. We've scattered around."

They crossed the street, went through office and lobby, and then Duane asked MacNelly to take them

"Duane! Lord, I Am Glad to See You!"

to a private room. Without a word the Captain complied. When they were all inside Duane closed the door, and, drawing a deep breath as if of relief, he faced them calmly.

"Miss Longstreth, you and Miss Ruth try to make yourselves comfortable now," he said. "And don't be distressed." Then he turned to his captain. "MacNelly, this girl is the daughter of the man I've brought to you, and this one is his niece."

Then Duane briefly related Longstreth's story, and, though he did not spare the ruffian chief, he was generous.

"When I went after Longstreth," continued Duane, "it was either to kill him or offer him his freedom on conditions. So I chose the latter for his daughter's sake. He has already disposed of all his property. I believe he'll live up to the conditions. He'll leave Texas never to return. Chesedine has been a mystery, and now it's his turn."

A few moments later Duane followed MacNelly to a large room, like a hall, and here were men reading and smoking. Duane knew these rangers.

MacNelly beckoned to his men. They crowded close, eager, like hounds ready to run. They all talked at once, and the word most significant and frequent in their speech was "outlaws."

MacNelly clapped his fist in his hand. "This'll make the adjutant sick with joy. MacNelly won't have it on the Governor! We'll show them about the ranger service. Duane! how'd you ever do it?"

"Now, Captain, not the half nor the quarter of this job's done. The chief's coming down the road. They'll ride in to town on the hot—two-thirty."

"How many?" asked MacNelly. "Foggin, Blossom Kane, Panhandle Smith, Boldt, Jim Fletcher, and another man I don't know."

"Foggin—that's the hard nut to crack! I've heard their record since

I've been in Val Verde. Where's Kane?"

"Kane's dead."

"Ah!" exclaimed MacNelly, softly. Then he grew businesslike, cool, and of harder aspect. "Duane, it's your game today. We're all under your orders."

"You understand there's no sense in trying to arrest Foggin, Kane and that lot?" queried Duane.

"No, I don't understand that," replied MacNelly, bluntly.

"It can't be done. The drop can't be got on such men. Foggin! That outlaw has to equal with a gun—unlucky—He's got to be killed quick. They'll all have to be killed. They're all bad, desperate, know no fear, are lightning in action."

"Very well, Duane; then it's a fight. That'll be easier, perhaps. The boys are spoiling for a fight. Out with your plan, now."

"But one man at each end of this street, just at the edge of town. Put four men up in that room over the bank—two at each open window. Let them hide till the main begins. The rest of your men put inside behind the counters, where they'll hide. Now go over to the bank, spend the thing on the bank officials, send your men over one by one. No hurry, no excitement, no unusual thing to attract notice in the bank."

"All right, that's great. Tell me, where do you intend to wait?"

Duane heard MacNelly's question, and it struck him peculiarly. He had seemed to be planning and speaking mechanically. As he was confronted by the fact it displeased him somewhat, and he became thoughtful, with lowered head.

"Where'll you wait, Duane?" insisted MacNelly, with keen eyes speculating.

"I'll wait in front—just inside the door," replied Duane, with an effort. "But will you hide?" asked MacNelly.

Duane was silent.

MacNelly started, and then a strange, comprehending light seemed to fill over his face.

"Duane, I can give you no orders today," he said, distinctly. "I'm only offering advice. Need you take any more risks? You've redeemed your self. The governor, the adjutant-general—the whole state will rise up and honor you. I say, as a ranger, need you take more risk than your captain?"

Still Duane remained silent. He was locked between two forces. And one, a tide that was bursting at its banks, seemed about to overwhelm him. That tide of side of him, the retreating side, the weaker, found a voice.

"Captain, just what I'll do or where I'll be I can't say yet. In meetings like this the moment decides. But I'll be there!"

MacNelly spread wide his hands, looked helplessly at his curious and sympathetic rangers, and shook his head.

"Now you've done your work—hid the trap—is this strange move of yours going to be fair to Miss Longstreth?" asked MacNelly, in significant low voice.

Like a great tree chopped at the roots, Duane vibrated to that. He looked up as if he had seen a ghost. Merely the ranger captain went on: "You can win her, Duane! Oh, you can't fool me. I was wise in a minute. Fight with us from cover. You'll be free, honored, happy. That girl loves you! I saw it in her eyes. She's—"

But Duane cut him short with a fierce gesture. He lunged up to his feet, and the rangers fell back. Dumb, silent, grim as he had been, still there was a transformation singularly more sinister, stranger.

"Enough, I'm done," he said, solemnly. "I've planned. Do we agree—or shall I meet Foggin and his gang alone?"

MacNelly cursed and again threw up his hands, this time in baffled chagrin. There was deep regret in his dark eyes as they rested upon Duane.

Duane was left alone.

Never had his mind been so quick, so clear, so wonderful in its understanding of what had heretofore been intricate and elusive impulses of his strange nature. His determination was to meet Foggin; meet him before anyone else had a chance—Foggin first—and then the others! He was as unalterable in that decision as if on the instant of its acceptance he had become stone.

Why? Then came realization. He was not a ranger now. He cared nothing for the state. He had no thought of freeing the community of a dangerous outlaw, or of ending the century of an obstacle to its progress and prosperity. He wanted to kill Foggin. It was significant now that he forgot the other outlaws. He was the gunman, the run-thriver, the gun-fighter, passionate and terrible. His father's blood, that dark and fierce strain, his mother's spirit, that strong and unquenchable spirit of the surviving pioneer—these had been in him; and the killings, one after another, the wild and hunted years, had made him, absolutely in spite of his will, the gunman. He realized it now, bitterly, hopelessly.

The thing he had intelligence enough to hate he had become. At last he shuddered under the driving, ruthless, inhuman blood-lust of the gunman. Actual prime of his record! Actual vanity in his speed with a gun! Actual jealousy of any rival! Duane could not believe it. But there he was, without a choice. What he had feared for years had become a monstrous reality. He stood stripped bare, his soul naked—the soul of Cain. And at the utter abasement the soul he despised suddenly leaped and quivered with the thought of Ray Longstreth.

Then came agony. He loved the girl. He wanted her. All her sweetness, her fire, and pleading returned to torture him.

At that moment the door opened, and Ray Longstreth entered.

"Duane," she said, softly. "Captain MacNelly sent me to you."

"But you shouldn't have come," replied Duane.

"As soon as he told me I would have come whether he wished it or not. You left me—all of us—stunned. I had no time to think you. Oh, I do with all my soul. It was noble of you. Father is overgone. He didn't expect so much. And he'll be true. But, Duane, I was told to hurry, and here I'm selfishly using time."

"Go, then—and leave me. You mustn't unnerve me now, when there's a desperate game to finish."

"Need I be desperate?" she whispered, coming close to him.

"Yes; it can't be else."

Her eyes were dark, strained, beautiful, and they shed a light upon Duane he had never seen before.

"You're going to take some mad risk," she said. "Let me persuade you not to. You said—you cared for me—and—oh, Duane—don't you know—?"

"The low voice, deep, sweet as an old chord, faltered and broke and failed."

Duane sustained a sudden shock and an instant of paralyzed confusion of thought.

She moved, she swept out her hands, and the wonder of her eyes dimmed to a flood of tears.

"My God! You can't care for me?" he cried, hoarsely.

Then she met him, hands outstretched.

"But I do—I do!"

Swift as light Duane caught her and held her to his breast. He stood holding her tight, with the feel of his warm, throbbing breast and the clasp of her arms and flesh and blood reacting to fight a terrible fear. He felt her, and for the moment the might of it was stronger than all the demon that possessed him. And he held her as if she had been his soul, his strength on earth, his hope of heaven against his lips.

The strife of doubt all passed. He found his sight again. And there rushed over him a tide of emotion utterly sweet and full, strong like an intoxicating wine, deep as his nature, something glorious and terrible as the blaze of the sun to one long in darkness. He had become an outcast; a wanderer, a gunman, a victim of circumstances; he had lost and suffered worse than death in that loss; he had gone down the endless, bloody trail, a filer of men, a fugitive whose mind slowly and inevitably closed to all except the instinct to survive, and a black despair; and now, with this woman in his arms, her swelling breast against his, in this moment almost of resurrection, he bent under the storm of passion and joy possible only to him who had endured so much.

"Do you care—a little?" he whispered unsteadily.

He bent over her, looking deep into the dark, wet eyes.

She uttered a low laugh that was half sob, and her arms slipped up to his neck.

"A little! Oh, Duane—Duane—a great deal!"

Their lips met in their first kiss. The sweetness, the fire of her mouth seemed so new, so strange, so irresistible to Duane. His sore and hungry heart throbbed with thick and heavy beats. He felt the outcast's need of love. And she gave up to the entrancing moment. She met him half-way, returned kiss for kiss, clasp for clasp, her face flushed, her eyes closed, till her emotion overcame her and she fell back upon his shoulder.

Duane suddenly thought she was going to faint. He declined then that she had understood him, would have denied him nothing, not even her life, in that moment. But she was overcome, and he suffered a pang of regret at his unrestraint.

Presently she recovered, and she drew only the closer, and leaned upon him with her face upturned.

To feel her hands on his, and they were soft, clinging, strong, like steel under velvet. He felt the rise and deep and mighty.

"I love you, Duane," she said. "For my sake don't go out to meet this outlaw face to face. It's something wild in you. Copier it if you love me."

Duane became suddenly weak, and when he did take her into his arms again he scarcely had strength to lift her to a seat beside him. She seemed more than a dead weight. Her calmness had died. She was throbbing, palpitating, quivering, with hot, wet cheeks and arms that clung to him like vines. She lifted her mouth to him, whispering, "Kiss me!" She meant to change him, hold him.

Duane bent down, and her arms went round his neck and drew him close. With his lips on hers he seemed to float away. That kiss closed his eyes, and he could not lift his head. He sat motionless, holding her, blind and helpless, wrapped in a sweet, dark glory. She kissed him—one long, endless kiss—or else a thousand times. Her lips, her wet cheeks, her hair, the softness, the fragrance of her, the tender clasp of her arms, the swell of her breast—all these seemed to inclose him.

Duane could not put her from him. He yielded to her lips and arms, watching her, involuntarily returning her caresses, sure now of her intent fascinated by the sweetness of her bewitched, almost lost. That was what it was to be loved by a woman. His years of outlawry had blotted out any boyish love he might have known. This was what he had to give up—all this wonder of her sweet person, this strange fire he feared yet loved, this mate his deep and tortured soul recognized. Never until that moment had he divined the meaning of a woman to a man. That meaning was spiritual in that he saw there might have been for him, under happier circumstances, a life of noble deeds lived for such a woman.

"Don't go! Don't go!" she cried as he started violently.

"I must. Dear, good-by. Remember I loved you."

He pulled her hands loose from his, stepped back.

"Ray, dear—believe—I'll come back!" he whispered.

These last words were falsehood. He reached the door, gave one last piercing glance to fix forever in memory that white face with its dark, staring, tragic eyes.

"Duane!"

He fled with that mean like thunder, death, hell in his ears. To forget her, to get back his nerve, he forced into mind the image of Foggin—Foggin had sent the cold sickness of fear to his marrow. There was a horrible thrill in his sudden remembrance that Foggin likewise had been haunted with fear of him. The dark tide over-whelmed Duane, and when he left the room he was fierce, implacable, steeled to any outcome, quick like a panther, sadder as death, in the thrall of this strange passion.

There was no excitement in the street. He crossed to the bank corner. A clock inside pointed the hour of two. He went through the door into the vestibule, looked around, passed up the steps into the bank. The clerks were at their desks, apparently busy, but they showed nervousness. The cashier poked at sight of Duane. There were men—the rangers—crouching down behind the low partition. All the windows had been removed from the iron grating before the desks. The safe was closed. There was no money in sight. A customer came in, spoke to the cashier, and was told to come to-morrow.

Duane returned to the door. He could see far down the street, out into the country. There he waited, and minutes were eternities. He saw no person near him; he heard no sound. He was insulated in his unnatural strain.

At a few minutes before half past two a dark, compact body of horsemen appeared far down, turning into the road. They came at a sharp trot—a group that would have attracted attention anywhere at any time. They came a little faster as they entered town; then faster still; now they were four blocks away, now three, now two, Duane backed down the middle of the vestibule, up the steps, and halted in the center of the wide doorway.

There seemed to be a rustling in his ears through which pierced sharp, ringing clasp of iron hoofs. He could see only the corner of the street. But suddenly into that shot leaping, limbed dusty bay horses. There was a clattering of nervous hoofs pulled to a halt.

Duane saw the tawny Foggin speak to his companions. He dismounted quickly. They followed suit. They had the manner of ranchers about to conduct some business. No guns showed. Foggin started leisurely for the bank door, quickening step a little. The others, close together, came behind him. Blossom Kane had a bag in his left hand. Jim Fletcher was left at the curb, and he had already gathered up the bridles.

Foggin entered the vestibule first, with Kane on one side, Boldt on the other, a little in the rear.

As he strode in he saw Duane.

"Hell's Fire!" he cried.

Something inside Duane burst, piercing all of him with cold. Was it that fear?

"Buck Duane!" echoed Kane.

"One instant Foggin looked up and Duane looked down.

Like a striking jaguar Foggin moved. Almost as quickly Duane threw his arm.

The boys boomed almost together.

Duane felt a blow just before he pulled trigger. His thoughts came fast, like the strange dots before his eyes. His raising gun had loosened in his hand. Foggin had drawn a quick-er! A tearing agony encompassed his breast. He pulled—pulled—at random. Thunder of beating shots all about him! Red flashes, jets of smoke, shrill yells! He was sinking. The end; yes, the end! With fading sight he saw Kane go down, then Boldt. But supreme torture, bitterer than death, Foggin stood, mane like a lion's, back to the wall, bloody-faced, proud, with his gun spouting red.

All faded, darkened. The thunder deadened. Duane fell, seemed floating. There it drifted—Ray Longstreth's sweet face, white, with dark, tragic eyes, fading from his sight.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Light shone before Duane's eyes—thick, strange light that came and went. For a long time dull booming sounds rushed by filling all. It was a dream in which there was nothing; a drifting under a burden; darkness, light, sound, movement; and vague, elusive sense of time—time that was very long. There was fire—creeping, consuming fire. A dark cloud of flame enveloped him, rolled him away.

He saw them, dimly, a room that was strange, strange people moving about over him, with faint voices, far away, things in a dream. He saw again, clearly, and consciousness returned, still unreal, still strange, full of those vague and far-away things. Then he was not dead. He lay stiff, like a stone, with a weight ponderous as a mountain upon him and all his bound body racked in slow, dull-beating agony.

A woman's face hovered over him, white and tragic-eyed, like one of his old haunting phantoms, yet sweet and eloquent. Then a man's face bent over him, looked deep into his eyes, and seemed to whisper from a distance, "Duane—Duane! Ah, he knows me!"

After that there was another long interval of darkness. When the light came again, clearer this time, the same earnest-faced man bent over him. It was MacNelly. And with recognition the past flooded back.

Duane tried to speak. His lips were weak, and he could scarcely move them.

"Foggin!" he whispered. His first real conscious thought was for Foggin. Ruthless passion—(terrible instinct!) (To be continued.)

FAST AREA OF TEXAS.

Some of the Magnificent Distances in the Lone Star State.

Those who live in the east and north have little or no conception of the magnitude of distances in Texas. There are just a few figures that will help to illustrate the vastness of area of the Lone Star State.

The distance from Houston to El Paso by the nearest rail route is 833 miles, which is only 114 miles less than the distance from New York to Chicago, 947 miles.

It is 820 miles by rail from San Antonio to El Paso. This is 114 miles greater than the distance from Chicago to Pittsburgh.

The distance from Echo, Tex., the most eastern point on a direct railroad route, to El Paso is 944 miles, or three miles less than the distance from New York to Chicago.

The distance from Brownsville, Tex., on the Gulf coast, the easternmost point on the Texas-Mexican border, to El Paso, the western terminus of the border, is more than 1,200 miles. This is greater than the distance from New York city to Tampa, Fla., or to Springfield, Ill. It is greater than the distance from New York to St. Louis by 140 miles.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Diana of Ephesus.

Ephesus was one of the twelve Ionic cities of Asia Minor and was situated in Lydia, near the mouth of the river Cayster. According to Strabo, it was founded by Androctes, son of Codrus. It ultimately came into possession of the Romans, and in the time of Augustus it was the greatest place of trade of all the cities of Asia west of the Taurus. St. Paul resided there three years, but the destruction of the great temple by the Goths in 260 A. D. gave it a blow from which it never recovered. This was the famous temple of Diana. Near the western extremity of the town are still to be seen some massive structures, which have since been carefully excavated. It is now certain that these stand on the famous temple site.

GREEN SHELL FLEAS.

Tiny Parasites That Attack Nearly All Fresh Water Fish.

Scarcely any species of fresh water fish is free from the attacks of the little disk-like fish flea, its flattened, greenish body being pressed close against the side of the fish.

The so-called fish louse is neither flea nor louse, but a member of a simple group of crustaceans, well known to naturalists for the parasite habit of most of its members.

It is far from having reached the ultimate degeneration of the chronic parasite, however, and often forsakes its victim to enjoy the pleasures of the free.

I have watched the fish fleas during these excursions into the open water, apparently engaged in their gambolous greenish disks dashing hither and thither in direct course, diving suddenly downward or upward or turning over and over in a series of rapid somersaults, which have been reckoned to number some hundred a minute.

Should a fish wish to rejoin a host it approaches until it is caught up in the swirl of water which accompanies the movement of the fish, and, as soon as it touches, it lays quick hold upon the skin of its victim by a pair of peculiar anchor organs, placed on the under surface near the mouth.—London Tit-Bits.

A Strong Will.

"Rastus," said the judge, "you say that you entered the lecherous and then, deciding to resist temptation, left it. Is that right?"

"Dat's about it, judge."

"Well, how about the two hens that were raising?"

"Ah, tells you, judge. Ah took dem. Ah reckoned dat Ah was 'titled to dat money for leavin' the rest."—New York Times.

One Good Reason.

"Why does the operation of hanging kill a man?" asked Dr. Whately. A physiologist replied:

"Because inspiration is checked, circulation stopped and blood suffices and congests the brain."

"Bosh," replied his grace. "It is because the rope is not long enough to let his feet touch the ground."

STANDARDIZATION OF FIRST AID WORK IS BEING PLANNED

Conference of Experts is Held to Promote Uniform
Methods.

RESCUE TESTS IN A REAL MINE

Practical Workers Stage an Explosion
and Rescue in Government's Mine at Brunston and Score High Points for Efficiency; Signal Code Adopted.

A most important conference of men engaged in practical safety first and mine rescue work was concluded at Pittsburgh last week. It was conducted under the auspices of the Mining Division of the Associated Companies and was participated in by mining men from practically all mining sections of the United States. The sessions were held at the Pittsburgh station of the Bureau of Mines. The primary purpose of the conference was to give an impetus to the movement to standardize all first aid work. Talks were given and demonstrations made to illustrate the methods of treating injuries according to the proposed standard methods, all of which excited the interest and held the attention of the persons present.

Among other subjects discussed were the following: "Mine Rescue Section Work," "Property Records," "Standards of Mine Rescue Training," "Types of Rescue Apparatus," "Technical Services," "Shipments," "Electric and Flame Safety Lamps," "Explosion Proof Motors," "Method of Sampling Air," "Permissible Explosives," "Mine Fires, Their Cause and Prevention," "Coal Dust Menace and Methods of Treatment," "Fumes and Gases and the Experimental Mine," "How to Take and Prepare Coal Samples," "Promotion of First Aid Meetings."

Free discussion of these and other subjects was engaged in and the practical experiences of men in rescue work and other phases of mining were given by a number of speakers.

One of the most valuable features of the conference was the mine rescue drill given in the Experimental Mine at Brunston, Pa. A section of the mine had been isolated as a mine-caving ground through the construction of bulkheads, making the entire area dead and practically air tight. Four falls and one hanging ground were arranged as obstacles and snags were started on steel barrows within the enclosure. Two tons of coal dust were distributed over the area. At the head of one of the entries a cannon charged with black powder was placed and discharged from the outside by electricity. This produced a violent explosion within the enclosure.

Four rescue teams of five men each were required to enter the mine, maneuver to a certain point in the smoke area and return bearing a 150 pound sack of sand on a stretcher. Fifteen minutes were allowed for this test. One team was meantime held in reserve at the mine. After the fourth team had completed the drill the life line was stretched the full length of the entry and all teams entered at one time to complete the drill, each team having been given a specific piece of work to do in a particular section. Upon the completion of these tasks, and after the mine air had been cleared, sixteen men entered the mine and independent of each other made examinations to determine the full point of the explosion. Of this number 12 made a correct designation while the other four gave their reasons why they believed the origin to have been at other points.

For this drill the teams were equipped with the following apparatus: Ten sets of flares, and 10 sets of Dracox, charged and ready for service, with 4 extra bottles charged; 4 extra reducing valves, and 2 extra mouthpieces for each type of apparatus; 2 water canisters; 1 water meter; 1 life line; 2 pairs of auto horns; 20 flash lights; 20 safety lamps; 1 army stretchers; 1 first aid cabinet and 4 formaldehyde candles.

The following code of auto horn and life line code signals were decided upon and used during the drill: One blast, or one pull of rope, denoted march from rest; 1 blast or pull while marching denoted halt; 2 blasts or pulls, retreat; 3, emergency, and 4, rewind life line. These were found to be very simple, easily remembered and fulfilled any and all requirements.

Will Mary Have Enough Dresses? How Many Blouses Will Tommy Need?
What Sort of a Suit Should He Have?

—These are only a few of the many perplexing questions that confront the busy mother as school time approaches. The beginning of school used to be quite as much of a terror to mothers as it is to the children themselves. But the new way—the efficient way—is to bring them to this store and fit them out complete, at a much less expense, and without the annoyance of Summer sewing days.

ONE THING CERTAIN ABOUT A BOY'S SCHOOL SUIT

—It can't be much of a success, unless it is stoutly made, and will wear, wear, WEAR.
